Dear Friends June 2015

Spring is in the air and usually this time of year brings with it fresh hope and growth. We have all observed some glumness in the metals markets due to the current stagnant prices. May we remind you that the best time to build your precious metals portfolio is while the market is down and before the premiums rise. One reason you might not have considered for putting away metals now is “BECAUSE YOU CAN”.

The industry volume has decreased by about 50% since 2011. Some states such as Minnesota charge sales tax on their metals and have made it difficult to purchase precious metals from out of state. We have stopped doing business with our Minnesota clients because we need to stay compliant and the “fee “ we would be required to pay in order to service that state is far too high. Hopefully, your state does not go down that route. The decrease in business the past few years has caused quite a few other metals companies to close their doors.

We are still here and intend to stay! Our new website is up and running and we intend to continue to improve it as time goes on. You can view it on your mobile devices as well as your computers. There you can get current spot prices and view the current specials “Box” or call us to get a quote , recommendation or place an order.

We are looking forward to sending our newsletters and metals updates to those of you who have supplied us with your email address via email to stay more current. Also, we will continue to send out our free information package to those who are new to our company or those you refer to us.

Our long-time friend, Roger Wiegand, editor of Trader Tracks, sent us the following to share with you, our readers. Roger has been in the investment and education arena for a long time and writes one of the most honest and current economic newsletters available. Roger shared a couple of his extras here, he calls After the Bell

Digital cash with no hard paper or metal currency in circulation would provide ultimate societal control says our Northern Advisor. –Roger

“A 'cashless society' will be the most ground shaking economic change ever. While the big banks want to do away with printed paper money for their own protection (bank runs), big government wants a cashless society even more (greed).

The underground (off the books) cash/barter economy arguably is already as large as the 'official' reported economy. The Federal, state, and local governments are not able to tax the unreported underground economy transactions. In a cashless society there is a detailed digital record of all economic transactions on which taxes can be levied and payment demanded. Big banks and big government will team up to force everyone into a cashless society a lot sooner than most think...the change will be another of those 'black swan' events that no one saw coming.” –Northern Advisor 5-4-15<http://www.washingtonsblog.com/2015/05/why-the-powers-that-be-are-pushing-a-cashless-society.html>.

First Roger’s opinion followed by two related stories

I concur with reader Craig in that the electronic devices are a curse driving families and friends apart. Basically it is making people loners, living in emotional shells or cocoons of cubicles, cars, and other forms or isolation. This is a year of change for me personally. I prefer a pen, yellow tablet and a plain telephone. While this sounds archaic, my ex-partner of years ago made it work just fine. He took it further having no office, secretary, or purchased car. He owned shopping centers, industrial buildings, huge restaurants and an auto dealership. He was a University of Oklahoma football player, boxer and oil driller in college. He attained the near age of 80 and died with no debts and $25 million in the 1980's. Simplicity has its merits. We can't dump all computers, but the engagement can be better controlled for most. –Roger

Society in general, I think, is just worn out from the aftermath of central bankers' disasters. Further, the bloom is off the rose with so many in world being tied to "The Machines" those computers that have become a millstone around the necks of millions. I just changed internet providers and with it am testing a No Television situation. So far its working but I miss my Sunday church services. However, those can be picked up other ways. – Roger Reader Craig on Greece: "This Greek situation is just an incredible Kabuki theater that leads into Nirvana. The Greek people are worn out, tired and disillusioned. Their past oligarchs like Onasis, Niarchos, etc., are today replaced by the Soros kind of oligarchs. There are no ethics and morals anywhere to be found, and all is mixed with poor or no manners, destroyed family structures, all driven by an entertainment that is digitally enhanced and distributed.

No one knows where this will lead to in the end since humanity is geared to having and not being any longer. Some of the Hollywood flicks give an insight into where things are heading. However, most humanoids don't even get that. Humanity has a way to regenerate itself and then carry on.

What I find interesting is the rapid changes our generation witnessed and has had to deal with. I personally find permanent electronic device software updates a curse. My goal is to free myself from using such devices except for calling and messaging. It's high time for a giga reset to wipe the slate clean and start all over again. Roger: In China millions of folks have only a cell phone and get along just fine. This is growing swiftly in Africa too, as the grid is absent in many locales. Elaborating on my old partner (above); he had one credit card, and a few blank checks in his wallet. His bookkeeper operated all the records and taxes. He would not even bother to keep track of nor claim business expenses as he told me the time trade off was not a good investment. He bought and gave away a complete $25,000 new wardrobe each year. Good clothes make the man he often said. This man was generous and good to his family and friends. Until the day he died he loved to just "make deals" buying and selling businesses and enjoying a lifestyle with few headaches. He started in the 1930's, beginning with a new car dealership in 1934. By 1938 it was solvent and he was on his way.

Precious metals are and will remain the core and foundation of whatever system will emerge after the reset. All else will crash and burn. The Greeks are ahead of the game since they are the first that went through the meat grinder. Be safe, have faith own physical precious metals." -Reader Craig Read Craig's suggested www.permaculture.org.au Roger: Iceland went through this mess before Greece and came out the other side unscathed and operating quite nicely. European central bankers are scared to death of "Repeating Iceland's" in all those ECB-Euro nations of Europe. Now its so messed-up to the point of no return and the end game is a deeper depression and evaporating bond land. The world has some harsh lessons ahead but will come out the other side healed and in much better shape to move forward.

This is not the end of the world but major readjustment. Compare it to cleansing or a cleaning out that was long overdue. The Sheeple in the street have had enough. –Roger ~

As we write this letter, focus is a real challenge. So much is happening so fast , its like being at a seven tiered three ring circus. So much drama, noise, information and smoke and mirrors. Just last night a dear client friend called us concerned about Jade Helm and the Walmart stores closings, bail ins of the banks and a few other monsters in the closet. She was in overwhelm. She is not alone. The tension in the air is sometimes palatable.

5/20/15 reuters.com WASHINGTON (AP) Four global banks plead guilty to rigging the world's currency market. For the first time in over twenty years, the Justice Department is holding the largest Wall Street Banks responsible for an embarrassing amount of crimes. These crimes include manipulating interest rates, currencies, and violating international antitrust laws with the collusion of two of Europe's biggest banks, The Royal Bank of Scotland and Barclays. The penalties they are fined with are $5.6 billion. Will this put a complete stop to Wall Street's deceitful way of conducting business or keep them from exploiting people? We don't know , but it's a start. This feels to be a cultural corruption in the current banking sector.

Since we have an 8 page newsletter, if you'd like to hear or read the actual interview, we recommend that you go to our Resource Consultants, Inc. on Facebook and "Like" our page.

Get Ready for the Next Stage of the Silver and Gold Secular Bull Market DHS

The past four years have seen gold decline from a nominal high price of $1,923 to an intraday low (so far) of $1,130 on November 3, 2014. During the similar period, silver plunged from $49.80 on Monday April 25, 2011 to its intraday low of $14.10 on December 1, 2014.

During this time frame, the metals several times formed "support" levels which lasted from a few months to over a year, only to disappoint the bulls by breaking through them on the downside and starting another leg down. By now, even the most die-hard "gold bugs" are questioning their resolve. Fair-weather precious metals' bulls have long since flown the coop - most of whom are unlikely to ever return to this "investment" space again.

The legions of vocal doubters - some of whom interestingly were disbelievers all the way up as well - during which time gold established eleven consecutive annual highs (!) and silver rose almost tenfold - can certainly be forgiven if they feel in their bones that precious metals' prices have, even now, nowhere to go but down.

But I would suggest that these people, still in the majority as this piece is being written - are not only incorrect, but because of their lack of understanding of bull and bear cycles - setting themselves up to miss out on the resumption of what could turn out to be the biggest precious metals' bull market of all time. Does the possibility over the next few years of 5x in gold and 7 - 10x in silver from current levels get your attention? If so, then please continue reading.

The Difference (for gold and silver) between Cyclical and Secular

During 1974-76, after gold had doubled in value, it dropped over 50%, convincing most that it was headed back down to $35. And then in less than three years, it proceeded to rise almost eightfold in price, proving all the bearish "experts" wrong. And silver increased by 10 times! What caused so many investors to get it wrong in the late '70s was the confusion that resulted from not understanding the difference between a cyclical and a secular market. Briefly stated, a secular bull market sees a lengthy, sustained price rise. Within this long rise however, will be found contra or cyclical bear markets, where the price declines, oftentimes sharply, for an extended period. At some point the larger secular rise resumes, up into its final blow-off high a number of years later.

The DOW tends to oscillate between secular bull and bear in 16 years' long waves. (If this pattern holds, the current stock market's bear phase - even though it has recently made new all-time nominal highs - should breathe its last sometime during late 2016. Given the lengthy 5 year cyclical rise that has gone on with only rare corrections to the uptrend, the possibility (probability?) of a significant drop into 2016 of between 20 and 50% should be seriously considered. After that, a new secular bull market should begin to form.

During the same timeframe, gold and silver, being highly uncorrelated to the general stock markets' movements, experienced a severe secular bear market, punctuated by sharp but ultimately failed cyclical bull runs. Gold and silver's last secular bear market lasted from 1980 to approximately 2002, about 22 years.

The current secular metals' bull market - still alive - came into being shortly after 2000. The current cyclical bear got underway in May, 2011 and most likely breathed its last during November-December, 2014.

Gold is now oscillating around $1,200 an ounce, and silver around $17.50. Technical analysts say that to prove a new bull market is under way, gold needs to trade somewhere between $1,450 and $1,650 an ounce. Silver should build a base above $20, with an "all clear" to the upside on a sustained move above $26. You could wait for these levels to be reached, but by then, a lot of profit potential would have been missed.

More importantly, the individual who does wait to "stack" silver or gold, will - if human nature is any guide - not buy any at that point either. I have posted many interviews on David Morgan's YouTube at his silverguru/silver-investor.com site here and have seen comments such as "I will buy silver when it hits $11" or "$9", etc. In the event, they will probably not do so for one of three reasons. First, in my considered opinion, it is unlikely to drop to that level during the current cycle. Second, even if it does, people will think they can wait for still lower levels in order to buy. And third, even if the "paper" price drops into that area, just try buying real "hold in your hand" silver for such a price. In 2008, when silver actually traded on the futures market for about $9, physical silver was virtually unavailable for less than $11-$12 the ounce. Sellers simply stopped offering it at anything near the listed paper price. The same thing proportionately went for gold and palladium.

My view about "the lows being in" for gold and silver is this...

Evidence has been mounting since November, 2014 that the current cyclical bear market lows for gold and silver have now been printed. The evidence I see in the charts of many quality mining producers, who have risen 20-40% off their December lows, and are printing higher lows and highs is very encouraging. Gold, silver, and especially palladium are showing similar chart patterns. Volume in the physical metals around the world remains robust, especially in China and India.

In almost all currencies other than the U.S. dollar, gold pricewise is working its way into solid intermediate highs. And yet most commentators are still "trash-talking" the metals - a good contrarian indicator.

I realize, however, that the metals have the unlikely but possible potential of making one last "low print" in order to shake out any remaining weak holders before resuming a strong, multi-year uptrend. Should that occur, I fully expect it to be of brief duration leading to a violent spike-low turnaround in a manner that catches almost everyone by surprise, leaving anyone behind who has not already begun to accumulate a position. As well, the resulting demand for physical gold and silver by newly converted bulls, will lead to substantially higher premiums for whatever metal is available.

I will go on record as stating that the lows, if they are not already in (which I believe as stated above is probably already the case), will be printed no later than the last week of August of this year. By September-October, concomitant with a substantially weaker stock market, gold, silver and palladium - along with the mining stocks - should be finishing their one year base-building in preparation for a powerful late 2015 - early 2016 breakout to the upside. Try not to miss this one!

Take a quick look at our financial system. Have things improved since the entire global system almost went down in 2008? Yes, there have been "changes" - your bank most likely has a "bail in" provision added to the fine print of your account, letting you know that if they go under due to mismanagement, you may be forced to help out with some of your hard-earned funds. And try to withdraw a significant amount of money during a financial crisis - odds are you'll be informed that you can only take out a relatively small amount per week, and oh, by the way, "What do you plan to use that money for?"

Money Market funds and 'savings' accounts now pay virtually no interest, but (so far) that's at least better than in European countries, where hapless account holders actually have to pay the bank for the privilege of leaving money in their account. However, this is now changing here as well, with Chase and several other banks announcing that they plan to begin charging fees for those who hold cash accounts.

Imagine, you paying the bank for the privilege of them holding YOUR cash!

Massive government debt. Underfunded pension plans. Trillions of dollars in artificial derivative trading vehicles created by over-leveraged banks, backstopped by Federal government printing of unlimited amounts of paper money. "Official" statistics, constantly "revised" a month or so after they have been released to the public. Published inflation rates which don't include most of the things we use and do on a daily basis. Geopolitical tensions with things spinning out of control in the Middle East. The list goes on and on.

There's a "war against cash"...

And now there's a virtual "war on cash" taking place at all levels. Governments around the globe have lowered the amount of cash a person can withdraw without getting the attention of authorities, snooping to see if you might be dealing in drugs or selling weapons to terrorists. Civil asset forfeiture means that if you are stopped on the road and have a few thousand dollars on you - no matter if you're going to buy a used car or plan to make some purchases on an extended vacation - the police can...and will...deprive you of it, without charging you of having committed a crime.

"Monetary thinkers" are saying that things would be so much more efficient, simpler and easier - for the government - if we all went totally to digital accounts. No need to carry cash around or pay bills by mail. The authorities will know exactly how much money you have and what you spend it on, with your balance under their control at the press of a button.

How the "Silk Road" can put gold and silver profit into your pocket.

Historically, the Silk Road refers to network of trade routes established during the Han Dynasty (206 BCE - 220 CE), a period now looked upon as a golden age in Chinese history. It provided commercial links for various regions of the known world in Asia, the Middle East, parts of Africa and Europe. Now the concept has been revitalized as China seeks to integrate commerce and finance along the route, which extends into Germany and France. Chinese officials speak of a "Silk Road Economic Belt", with a southern "Maritime Silk Road" which stretches from China in the east to Italy in the West.

PiercePoints.com

Precious metals' investors in the West will find a recent announcement by the Chinese to be of great interest. A gold sector fund involving countries along the Silk Road has been set up in China's Xi'an City. According to china.org.cn,

The fund, led by the Shanghai Gold Exchange (SGE) is expected to raise an estimated 100 billion yuan ($16.1B) in three phases. China is the world's largest gold producer, and also a major exporter of gold. Among the 65 countries along the routes of the Silk Road Economic Belt, and the 21st-Century Maritime Silk Road, there are numerous Asian countries identified as important reserve bases and consumers of gold. About 60 countries have invested in the fund, which will in turn facilitate gold purchases for central banks of member states to increase their holdings of the precious metal, according to the SGE.

This is a significant development for several reasons. First it demonstrates the enduring commitment of Asian countries and their central banks to the acquisition and long-term holding of gold. Second, it provides an additional demand component driving the world's gold production as well as its price. Third, it formalizes a process whereby investment money will continue to flow into and invigorate the mining sector, which over the last few years has increasingly been starved for operational and discovery capital.

Reflections on a recent trip to the "land of silver"

In February of this year, I spent two weeks in Argentina, fly fishing for Rainbows and Brown Trout in Patagonia. In Buenos Aires, Calafate, Ushuaia, and with my fishing guides, I had some interesting experiences when comparing their response to sound money (silver) with that of a paper promise (pesos).

I took along a tube of one-tenth ounce .999 fine silver bullion rounds, and handed them out to taxi drivers, waitresses, airline stewardesses and fishing guides.

Speaking in my limited Spanish, I would tell them, Para usted, esta es la décima parte de la onza de plata pura – For you, this is one-tenth of an ounce of pure silver.

The look on their faces was amazing. After realizing what they were holding - and rubbing the bullion coin between their fingers - their eyes lit up, they smiled and thanked me profusely. All of this for just one-tenth of an ounce of silver!

Ironically, Argentina means "silver/coins" in Latin. In Spanish, it translates as "silvery." In a common border with Uruguay, the massive muddy river flowing alongside the capital's doorstep is called Rio de la Plata - "river of silver."

Several times during the last few decades, Argentina has experienced runaway inflation to the extent that its currency became virtually worthless, impoverishing millions of people. Family fortunes generations in the making were destroyed. Think what it might have meant to a middle-class family, had they possessed only a few ounces of gold or a tube or two of silver rounds. In some measure, their finances would have been protected, as have those of millions of people over thousands of years when financial and political unrest became the norm. It has always been thus when paper money's value eventually accelerates into a downhill run towards its intrinsic value - zero.

Sadly, the ruling elites seem to have learned little from the fiscal mismanagement of their predecessors. When I traveled to Argentina in 2009, the Exchange rate was 3:1 – three pesos for one U.S. dollar. Now, just 6 years later, the official rate is 8.5:1 – but street-side in the “blue market” from the arbolitas (literally, "swinging trees") you can get 12-15:1.

Inflation runs at 30% per year. At a restaurant, you are not allowed to post a tip on your charge card, but must remit cash. Offer a $50 bill for a $20 tab and the receiver wants to hand you pesos instead than dollars. Hapless touristas – myself included – are charged the official exchange on a purchase, which is half the “blue” rate.

Amazingly, the head of Argentina's central bank has said that there is no correlation between the decline of the peso's value due to inflation, and the amount of new money being printed by the government! That was the identical view before. And the results will be the same - destruction of the currency's value in a few years, and impoverishment once again for most of the population, who have no alternative.

Venezuela is in the intermediate stages of this same downward spiral. Myway.com reports: ...inflation is racing so fast that ATMs have failed to keep pace. Many deliver a maximum of just $1.50 worth of bolivars per transaction. Some shoppers stay away from cash altogether, according to reports in local media, leaning more heavily on credit cards so they can pay for purchases later, when they'll cost less in dollar terms thanks to inflation.

Inflation - Coming soon to a Location near You

Just because the U.S. is not currently experiencing a hyperinflationary environment like that of Argentina and Venezuela, don't think our current tamer version does not matter. If you're not quite sure about the accuracy of our heavily-massaged CPI figures which claim an annual 1-2% inflation rate, a more accurate compilation can be found at shadowstats.com. Utilizing price analysis formulas which the government formerly employed, shadowstats calculates that the true U.S. inflation rate is actually running between two and four times currently-stated figures.

If your Social Security or pension checks assume 2% annual inflation, but the real rate is 5%, then each dollar you receive will buy 3 cents less than it would have the year before. In three years, you will have lost 10% of your purchasing power. Hint: This is how our government will be able to "pay your full pension/Social Security amount" in nominal dollars, whereas over time, you'll actually be receiving only a fraction of what you had been expecting in terms of real purchasing power. The Solution? Hold Gold and Silver.

Avoid Monster Mistakes as you Build your "Monster Stash"

Though your metals' holdings will perform a dual function, they should be looked upon as insurance first, profit second. But if you do hope to turn a profit someday on them— beware of buying precious metal commemoratives, special event medallions, coins or ingots. The only exception might be in case you truly love the artistic nature or subject matter of an item in question, not because you expect one day to sell it for a profit. I have seen “limited edition” specimens advertised for 5 to 10 times the value of their gold or silver content, which when sold back to a dealer would only be paid at the spot price!

Resource Consultants, Inc. has not and does not recommend special event commemorative coins or medallions as investments, but they can certainly make them available for you should you want any. They can make an interesting and fun collection or gift but as a rule you are best off sticking with the basic coins and bars when building your metals portfolio. They feel United States coins are the only good choice when it comes to collectable or numismatic coins.

CATEGORY ONE ~ INSURANCE

What's really important in building your holdings over time into something of significant dollar value - is to pay as close as possible to the current value of the metal itself. Expect to pay a relatively small premium for the expense of refining, minting and distribution. But the premium should be a reasonable percent of the metal's value. Silver Eagle carry a slightly higher premium than say an Austrian Philharmonic or Canadian Maple Leaf and non-coins such as rounds or bars will carry the lowest premiums. However, if the time comes that you choose to liquidate some of your metals, you should get more back for an American Eagle than you would for the other items too so it is all relative.

The American Silver Eagle coins (introduced by the U.S. Mint in 1986) are still the favorite for most silver bugs with the U.S. . Canadian Silver Maple Leaf and Austrian Silver Philharmonic 1oz coins following close behind. You are paying a slightly higher premium than you would for you would for a silver bullion round of the same weight, but receiving an actual legal tender coin of great beauty, recognized around the world.

Silver Eagles can be purchased in single units, tubes of 20, or in what the trade calls a "Monster Box". These heavy-duty green plastic boxes contain 500 coins, packaged 25 tubes, with 20 coins to a tube. Generally, the boxes, which come sealed by the U.S. Mint with identifying nylon straps, should not be opened, because when/if you decide to sell, each tube would have to be inspected and counted when the market buys back one of these impressive 42 pound containers. Keeping it in the sealed Mint Box could make it more attractive to a buyer. They are also the best value when you purchase in this quantity!

Whether or not you get around to accumulating enough Silver Eagles to fill a Monster Box – or stock it with standard bullion rounds - is less important than that you got your "stacking" program underway. If you believe as I do that the availability of silver is going to increasingly come into question even as the price moves much higher, perhaps it's about time you took some action.

The Aden Sisters (Mary Anne and Pamela), respected analysts of long standing, quite recently wrote the following:

JP Morgan obviously thinks silver is going up, and we do too. We think your patience today will be well rewarded in a future rise....it's important for silver to continue holding above its seven month support at $15.40. If it then rises and stays above both its old 2013 support and 65 week moving average at $18.50, it'll start on a bullish path.

Silver could then jump up to the $22-$24 levels, its next step. By then, it would clearly test the $30 level, which would be the following step. The bottom line is, silver has great potential and appears to be leading the other metals.

My money is on the views expressed by the Aden Sisters. How about yours?

Recently, silver rounds have been made available in fractional sizes too. Having some silver bullion on hand in the form of fractional rounds or 90% silver dimes, quarters and half dollars could be a really good idea in the very near future, more than ever before. Call us now for current prices and recommendations. 800-494-4149

David is pretty strong on Silver, and justly so. Silver is not only tremendously undervalued at this time; Silver is the metal you will turn to for your day to day purchasing power. David's idea of having 1/10 oz silver rounds for tips and education is great too! Nearly always, only the uneducated would prefer paper real to silver.

Think of silver as your precious metals checking account or cash on hand. Gold on the other hand, could be thought of your precious metals savings account or the money you put away for your retirement or large purchases. . Gold is a time proven store of wealth. It takes up very little space to store and anyone who knows anything about economics and history loves to own it!

Gold bullion is available in 1oz and fractional sizes. While many countries mint Gold coins, the favorites here are the U.S. Gold Eagle, Austrian Gold Philharmonic, Canadian Gold Maple Leaf and S. Africa Gold Krugerrand. All come in 1oz as well as fractional sizes.

Many of you have been taking advantage of the discount and picking up fifty coin rolls of 1/10 oz. Gold Eagles. We advise you to continue to do this while the prices and premiums are low. The fraction 1/2oz 1/4oz and 1/10oz sizes always come in handy when you only need to liquidate or trade a small amount and they make great gifts to have on hand as well! The smartest and happiest investors understand compounding interest. They have been setting in their investment account to use towards securing the purchasing power of their future. When the prices are low they pick up as much as possible. When the prices are higher they pick up less. What they end up with is cost averaged acquisitions of precious metals which can help give them peace of mind get them through an economic disaster which is fast approaching. If you have an IRA account, did you know that you can own physical precious metals with the funds you already have sitting there? Call us and we will help you with the process! 800-494-4149

BEYOND BULLION~INSURANCE WITH A KICKER

Bullion coins, bars and rounds, in our opinion should be the backbone of anyone's metals portfolio and a part of everyone's IRA account. However; many of us also love the slightly circulated Older U.S. Gold and Silver coins available in XF condition. These are attractive for a couple of reasons. Firstly, they are a private, low premium store of wealth. Secondly, they have a beauty and history behind them. These coins were minted more than 100 years ago to be used as United States currency. They have survived all that time and are now cherished as a reminder of what honest and hard money really was. The coins that bought a full suit of clothing and a night out back then, still can purchase those same items today! The $20 St Gaudens and Liberty gold coins contain nearly 1 full ounce of Gold. The fractional $10, $5 & $2.5 Liberty and Indian Gold coins are a wonderful inexpensive way to own smaller pieces of gold and we would love to help you put together a nice date set!

CATEGORY THREE~SPECULATION

This category of U.S. gold coins we list under speculation. However; if you ever wanted to start or work on completing a collection of numismatic coins WAIT NO LONGER! Because of low spot prices in metals as well as the amount of third party graded Mint State coins which has been sold back to the market in the past several years, the premiums has come down in these coins as well. Some Numismatic coins can be affordable for most everyone. This is definitely a buying opportunity and if you have a nice holding of the two previous categories now is the time to fill this space in your portfolio.

In this letter, we have a very limited number of 1907 MS63 Gold Liberty coins at $1599.00 to offer you. This was the last year of issue for this coin.

The next $20 Gold coin minted was the beautiful $20 St Gaudens. We have a special price of $1485.00 for the first 25 spoken for.

Prices can and may fluctuate.

Today we quote from history..."If you're waiting for the opportune moment; that was it."
