Dear Friends, July/August 2016
(email copy)

We want to start this letter with a little housekeeping. We are switching our letter to an email format to provide more and better information and service as well as make it more economically feasible for us as a company. Those who have given us their correct email addresses will be receiving more information as well as be able to view the charts and photos more clearly and in color. Since some people move and don't notify us, mailings could and sometimes continue to be sent to the wrong address. We are cleaning up our mailing list and deleting those who we have not heard from in a while. This could be the last hard copy letter you will receive from us. If you enjoy our free newsletters and want to stay in touch, call 800-494-4149 or email is at metalguys@buysilvernow.com to confirm that we have the correct contact information for you.

As many of you know, my husband, Pat hosted Hard Money Watch on the Financial News Network for well over two decades. One thing Patrick did a few times was to challenge his listeners to make an educated guess of what they thought the spot price of Gold or Silver would be by the end of the year. The one who had guessed the closest before the deadline was awarded a small prize. How many of you think you know what to expect by the end of this quarter in metals?

Every day we get calls from clients wanting to know what we think the metals markets will do in the near future. Most of us are bombarded with a continuous stream of media. One economist claiming Gold will fall to $800. per oz. and another saying it could run to $10K per oz. in a week's time! Either case would come with more chaos than anyone wants.

Resource Consultants, Inc. is a pretty fiscally conservative company; we doubt that either scenario is in our near future. What we do believe is that the fiat monies of the world are in big trouble, and the dollar is backed by more debt now than ever.

With near zero interest rates and the banking systems in trouble it is pretty difficult to defend the thought of storing much of your wealth in the bank, especially one that has been bailed out. One would have to be pretty naïve to not realize that if a bank has been bailed out it WILL eventually be bailed in which means it can take your monies, which by the way no longer belong to you once they are deposited, and give you stock in the failing bank instead. Now… doesn't owning some hard money which will always have value and is easy to liquidate when you choose to, or need to, sound a little less risky?

Immediately following the Brexit June 24th at around 3AM we saw Gold spot prices had jumped up $100. per ounce. By 2PM the same day it had backed off by half but still that was still over $50 higher than the preceding days close. Silver and Platinum also saw nice upward moves. Why? It could be that not only the United States, but the world economy is suffering from and growing weary of fiat money.

We feel that having a minimum of 15% to 20% of your financial portfolio in physical precious metals will not hurt you and just could be one of the most important decisions you can make to secure your financial future. You can contact us Monday through Friday by calling 800-494-4149 or 480-820-5877.

Contest

We would like to hear what you think the spot price for Gold and Silver will be at 3:30 PM Arizona time, Friday September 30th 2016. The spot price will be the one shown on the www.buysilvernow.com website at that time. The deadline for getting your predictions to us is August 15th 2016. We will be giving away a one ounce Silver Eagle to up to 10 folks who can guess the correct spot price for Silver and 10 folks who guess the correct spot price for Gold. This should be fun! 800-494-4149 Must have a U.S mailing address to be eligible to play.

In 1787 President George Washington wrote "Paper money has had the effect in your state that it ever will have, to ruin commerce, oppress the honest, and open a door to every species of fraud and injustice."

Brexit, The British exit from the European Union is, in our opinion, just another sign of the times. Multitudes of people throughout the world are getting fed up with fiat currencies and fiat governments and the fiat banking systems. This move by the Brits has created quite a ripple effect and it would not be surprising to see other countries or even States struggling and possibly succeeding in freeing themselves from the crowded cocoon of the " New or One World Order." It, to them, must feel like break free and live or stay and be devoured.

No doubt there will be massive fear and opposition by those who frantically struggle to control and protect the house of cards from falling and exposing the naked emperor. The central bankers are scrambling to stay in power and bail-ins seems inevitable. The domino effect has been set in motion. It is said "When Britain sneezes, Italy catches a cold".

Per German Chancellor Angela Merkel "The reality is that a majority of British citizens voted to leave... so I await a communication about Article 50 [the formal trigger for withdrawal] from the UK addressed to the EU,".

Sovereignty is fast becoming a thought in the minds of those who want to exit this united financial fraud which has been growing like glistening spider webs on steroids.

Epsilon Theory: Waiting for Humpty Dumpty

Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall.
All the king's horses and all the king's men
Couldn't put Humpty together again.

Brexit is a Bear Stearns moment, not a Lehman moment. That's not to diminish what's happening (markets felt like death in March, 2008), but this isn't the event to make you run for the hills. Why not? Because it doesn't directly crater the global currency system. It's not too big of a shock for the central banks to control. It's not a Humpty Dumpty event, where all the Fed's horses and all the Fed's men can't glue the eggshell back together. But it is an event that forces investors to wake up and prepare their portfolios for the very real systemic risks ahead.

There are two market risks associated with Brexit, just as there were two market risks associated with Bear Stearns.

In the short term, the risk is a liquidity shock, or what's more commonly called a Flash Crash. That could happen today, or it could happen next week if some hedge fund or shadow banking counterparty got totally wrong-footed on this trade and - like Bear Stearns - is taken out into the street and shot in the head.

In the long term, the risk is an acceleration of a Eurozone break-up, which is indeed a Lehman moment (literally, as banks like Deutsche Bank will become both insolvent and illiquid). There are two paths for this. Either you get a bad election/referendum in France (a 2017 event) or you get a currency float in China (an anytime event). Brexit just increased the likelihood of these Humpty Dumpty events by a non-trivial degree.

What's next? From a game theory perspective, the EU and ECB need to crush the UK. It's like the Greek debt negotiations ... it was never about Greece, it was always about sending a signal that dissent and departure will not be tolerated to the countries that matter to the survival of the Eurozone (France, Italy, maybe Spain). Now they (and by "they" I mean the status quo politicians throughout the EU, not just Germany) are going to send that same signal to the same countries by hurting the UK any way they can, creating a Narrative that it's economic death to leave the EU, much less the Eurozone. It's not spite. It's purely rational. It's the smart move.

What's next? Every central bank in the world will step up their direct market interventions, particularly in the FX market, where it's easiest for Plunge Protection Teams to get involved. Every central bank in the world will step up their jawboning and "communication policy" to support financial asset prices and squelch volatility. It wouldn't surprise me a bit if the Fed started talking about a neutral stance, moving away from their avowed tightening bias. As I write this, Fed funds futures are now pricing in a 17% chance of a rate CUT in September. Yow!

What's the result? I think it works for a while, just like it worked in the aftermath of Bear Stearns. By May 2008, credit and equity markets had retraced almost the entire Bear-driven decline. I remember vividly how the Narrative of the day was "systemic risk is off the table." Yeah, well ... we saw how that turned out. Now to be fair, history only rhymes, it doesn't repeat. Maybe this Bear Stearns event isn't followed by a Lehman event. But that's what we should be watching for. That's what we should be preparing our portfolios for. ~ Thank you Dr. Hunt

Fiat currency is an IOU issued by the government. If the government that issues it does not keep its promise that fiat money can and has at times quickly become quite worthless.

A nation can't grow its way out of debt if growth requires ever-increasing amounts of new borrowing. In that situation debt increases faster than societal wealth until the system becomes unsustainable. Then it collapses.~ The Money Bubble

"Honey, just going to the store for a loaf of bread"

You might remember reading of the Germans pushing wheelbarrows full of marks to buy food and some even burning them to keep warm. The mark had gone from 57 for a dollar to 170 billion being needed to equal 1 dollar in a matter of 2 years! That is one example of hyperinflation getting out of hand and setting up the perfect situation for Hitler to step in. Some stocks still can and will do very well but even stocks can and do sometimes fall to zero. Don't invest more than you can afford to lose.

What does this mean for precious metals? Because physical precious metals in the form of Gold or Silver coins do not depend on a government for value and are tangible assets they are still considered to be real money. Gold, because of its portability, rarity and durability has proved to be a favorite form of exchange for goods and services and a store of wealth for thousands of years.

Someone wise once said "A nation can't grow its way out of debt if growth requires ever increasing amounts of new borrowing."

The cost of living doubles every 20 years. Yet most people have reached the top of their pay scale by the time they are 40 to 45 years old. By the time a person has reached 55 to 60 years of age income generally decreases yet, the dollar buys less. Our dollar has decreased by 25 times its value. This was largely due to the repeal of the Glass-Steagall act of 1935. The Glass

Steagall act was put in place to keep banks from making risky investments which would put investor's money at risk. Once the banks were able to find loopholes they engaged in speculative trading, investment banking through separate subsidiaries and got away with it. By 1999 there was little noticeable difference between commercial banks, investment banks and hedge fund.

The Gold and Silver "C" is Here - What Now?

David H. Smith

This Update Report is written for your consideration on Thursday, July 7, 2016. After one of the largest rises in many years - in terms of percentage gains and the time involved to do so - gold, silver and the mining stocks are undergoing what looks to be the beginning of what may become a substantial correction. This is a good thing. In fact if it does not happen soon, I would become concerned for the duration of what I, and others who are my market teachers, believe is destined to become a bull run for the record books. Let me explain...

Last December, by most indications, the vicious, lengthy cyclical bear market in the commodities sector - highlighted by both precious and base metals, appears to have ended. In silver it started in May 2011. in Gold, around September of the same year. Gold declined 44%; Silver, because it's inherently more volatile, dropped about 70%. The sell-off was longer and deeper than just about any person who is truthful with you - present company included - was expecting. The commodities sector itself almost vaporized. By some accounts, it was the biggest drop in the past 90 years. Mining stocks dropped 80-90%. Some cratered 95%. Hundreds fell 100% (disappeared). scores more are even now on life-support. A few went to pot...literally. They now peddle Mary Jane to investors who formerly held mining stocks.

It looked like Armageddon had hit the gold market, and for many investors it was just that. But as you can see in the chart below, for gold, this was really just "par for the course". Since silver has a 90% price directional correlation to gold, its deeper drop was to be expected.

Table 2: Gold has experienced five bear and bull cycles since the 1970s*

On January 19, 2016, the mining stocks made an intraday trading bottom, first dropping down to shake out the last "weak hand" survivors of the most brutal mining stock bear market in memory - then turning around the same day to the upside. In my opinion, the 2011-15 drama was far worse than 2008-09, and more violent than the drawn out secular precious metals' bear market lasting from 1980 to around 2000...both of which saw this writer as a participant-near victim. The chart below demonstrates what happened. I own this stock. You can find dozens more that did the same thing. It's here because I was watching the quote machine in real time on the day it printed down to $0.22 cents. During the previous few years, I had held this stock at $4.50, sold and re-bought at $1.50, etc. I bought back in again for the last time, during the fall of 2015 at .35 and 27 cents.

On the day it printed .22 cents I simply could not believe my eyes. Since the percentage of any one stock I wanted to hold was already in place, I did not buy more. Not to mention, "Would it next drop to .10 cents?"

AXU 2016, courtesy of stockchart.com

View AXU's chart pattern as a template for many others...and for physical gold and silver themselves. In 2011, AXU traded at over $10.00 a share. It had one producing mine. It is not currently producing below $20 silver due to low prices, but it now has two mines, and has cut production costs substantially. Scores of other mining companies with highly-competent management have done the same thing.

Mining stocks have outperformed physical gold and silver. So far...

Thus far in 2016, mining stocks on a percentage basis have outperformed the physical metal. Over time this is the normal set of circumstances, because, by definition, stock prices represent greater risk. Metals cannot and have not ever gone to zero. Stocks often do, either by going bankrupt, being nationalized by a host country, or through share dilution of 100:1 by companies trying to stay alive, but which sometimes still go to zero.

This situation will likely change as the year goes on, as metals' prices play tag team with miner values. This will be predicated upon the continuation of global investment demand, with the kicker being how much industrial hedge silver buying adds to the demand mix.

As the bull market progresses, expect this pricing relationship to see-saw back and forth. What is likely to occur as the bull run gets underway over the next couple of years, is that gold and silver supply for investment purposes is going to come under severe pressure as more and more people around the globe wake up and rush to buy. At some point, physical metal may become unavailable at any price, or certainly at a price that makes sense. If so, investors will rush into mining stocks, pushing them skyward in circumstances reminiscent of the 2000 dotcom mania, increasing investor risk massively. If you've put away some gold and silver now, or in the reasonably near future, you can watch calmly while others become overwhelmed with fear and greed. While others pay "unreasonable" prices. While others cannot buy gold and silver at all.

What happens when a coin shop or a mail-in gold/silver dealer "runs out"?

The supply chain for precious metals that feeds the vast majority of coin shops, mail-in dealers, and even most mints, is fairly narrow. Whether it's in the U.S., Canada, the U.K., the Eurozone, or India and China. It's not designed for holding massive amounts of product, "just in case" a demand volume spike hits at some point in the future. Rather it's more like "just in time". Supply pipelines rely on a network of wholesale sources selling to retail outlets, who sell to the public. When metals' dealers run out of product and are not able - or are unsure if they are going to get replacement metal to re-sell, they're going to do one of two, or both things. They'll raise the premiums substantially on what they have left to sell. Then they're going to close down for awhile. When they reopen, if demand still overwhelms supply, the few sellers that still have metal will be charging an arm and a leg for what's left.

Most readers of this letter do not, and probably should not invest in mining stocks, at least before they've acquired some physical metal first. Doug Casey calls them "burning matches" for a reason. The largest mining companies in the world are actually "wasting assets". Every ounce, (or pound in the case of copper, lead and zinc), means they are coming closer to mining-out their resource. They need to constantly locate more to replace what they've dug up and sold. While they're at it, they have to deal with possible mine shaft collapses, tailings pond issues, lower than expected ore body values, and even nationalization (outright theft), by host nations.

Sometimes tax law changes, revocation of mining licenses and even "forced partnerships" by the host nation, where they insert themselves as business associates in your production operations, can destroy profits. How do you avoid these complications? You de-risk things by purchasing and holding the metals they produce. Only the person who holds them in their hand has legal and legitimate claim. And that person is...you! Even the money in your purse or wallet has other claimants on it. You have to find someone who will take it from you in exchange for a good or service you want. Or sometimes an entity - read "the government" will just take it from you, period. Think taxation. Think inflation.

That's why David Morgan calls what you carry around "paper promises". Do yourself - and your family - a big favor and exchange some of those promises for money that has never gone to zero in value, like all the paper currencies ever issued have done since the Chinese started that game centuries ago. "But my paper promises still have value", you say. Yes, but consider that the purchasing power they had as recently as the 1970's has declined sharply. The $20 bill you used to spend then? Now you'll need a $50 bill to come even close to buying the same amount of goods and services. And how about that pocket change of 1964 and earlier 90% silver dimes, quarters and fifty-cent pieces we used to buy stuff with?

Today, with silver around $20/ounce, one of those silver quarters will set you back by about 3 and 1/2 ($3.65) of your paper promises. In the trade it's called "junk silver". But those values sure don't sound like junk to me. And did I mention that if you had purchased that silver quarter from Resource Consultants as recently as January of this year, it would have cost you only about $2.50? Think about it this way. During the last 6 months - in relation to real money - silver - the paper in your wallet has lost 35% of its purchasing power! So, which is the real junk?

Not everything that shines is truly golden. Buy only the real deal!

Lately, a virtual flood of counterfeit coins, bullion rounds and ingots have been finding its way into the market, to the detriment of more than a few hapless buyers. It's especially dangerous for buyers on sites like eBay and Craig's List, but both customers and dealers in coin shops have been taken advantage of as well. Many of these fakes - some rather sophisticated - have been sourced from China. But regardless of their origin, you don't want to become a victim. From whom you buy should always be an issue of paramount concern, before you lay your Benjamin's, Grants, and Jacksons on the counter. CoinWeek.com provides a good summation, stating:

These new fakes not only have a better strike quality than previous examples, but there are no obvious errors in the packaging which bears the certificate number and other authentic-looking details from the purported manufacturer. Measure the fake by length and width, and it seems like the real deal, but the bars are noticeably thicker when compared to a genuine bar, so that these fake PAMP Suisse gold bars weigh the same as the real thing.

The most important step is to make sure you're buying from a reputable, licensed dealer. Some people buy from established local sellers they've dealt with for years. Others only purchase from big well-known precious-metal dealers on the Internet...

The main point is to make sure you know with absolute certainty who you're buying from. Does the firm have a vested interest in carefully screening what it buys and sells? RESOURCE CONSULTANTS does. Will you have recourse if it turns out what you bought isn't the real deal? The counterfeiters are getting better and better at what they do. The only way to combat them is to be a smarter buyer of authentic gold coins and bars.

In this case, it's not just caveat emptor. But also caveat venditor (seller beware) as well!

Carefully Study the Resource Consultants Market Letter Archives

The reasons for holding precious metals - for insurance first, profit potential second - are many and compelling. For the last few years, in addition to myself, several other writers, including Roger Wiegand and the late Ian McAvity (Co-Founder of the Central Fund of Canada - CEF), have written about them for Resource Consultants. David Morgan, with whom I work as Senior Analyst for The Morgan Report comprehensively covers them in his letter of the same name. Resource Consultants has archived these essays. Whether you are new to the precious metals' arena or an old hand who has been "stacking" metal for quite awhile, it is my strong recommendation that you take the time to read and reflect upon the information contained therein. Many investors have paid thousands of dollars for the information Resource Consultants makes available to you...for free!

Where we go from here - how and why you might consider taking action

By the time you read this letter, the correction in gold and silver may have already run its course, with a move above the spike highs of $1,375 and $21 respectively. They may be backing and filling with a controlled downward slant into this year's earlier support belts into the $1,280-$16 range. Or worst case scenario, maybe things really go short-term negative and prices drop further. On a purely seasonal basis, prices should be soft, and conceivably trace 50% of the entire run from January. Of course what should happen and what actually does may be two different things.

In my considered opinion, you would be remiss to focus on just one of these scenarios. The power and volume of the run so far indicates that we are in the early first-stage of what is going to eventually be one for the record books. That's why, although I sold some mining stock trading portions earlier in the week, I am still almost 80% invested. I would never consider selling any physical metal at this stage of the game. Stanley Kroll summed it up best, saying "Be right! Sit tight!" Almost no one can make and keep significant money by trying to jump in and out of the market. Of course it helps to have a position in the first place, no?

The evolving fundamental and technical underpinnings are heralding a paradigm shift from a cyclical bear market to a resumption of the much larger and more enduring secular bull phase. This third major impulse leg from the 2000 lows is likely to be the biggest yet, enduring for at least the next few years. At the conclusion of each correction, look at the charts for higher highs and higher lows.

The reasons for such optimism, on both the supply and demand sides of the equation point to a tectonic shift from what was perceived by only a relative few gold and silver bugs just last year. The Transparent Gold Holdings chart courtesy of SRSRocco.com shows what happened just after the 4th of July holiday. ETFs and Funds on the exchanges added a one-day record of 1.4 million ounces of gold.

Post-4th of July massive volume in gold, concomitant with similar action in silver

Look at some of what's being said here as hyperbole if you want. But the bottom line is that if you have not yet begun your metals' purchasing program, or haven't purchased all you intend to get, the time to act grows short. Because the summer months are normally more quiet than in the spring or fall, you may have until September, and be able to pay a bit less. But will this be a "normal" summer? Only the market knows for sure, and will give us the reasons after the fact. My sense is that things will not be normal this time around. However, to quote my favorite psychiatrist, the late Moe Howard, "We shall see what we shall see!"

Sure, you may be "planning" to buy some metal. But human nature being what it is, every time the price goes down, you will probably just watch - even though you had earlier said you would buy. "Well, maybe it will go lower, and then I will 'back up the truck!" But in the event, you will almost certainly end up buying nothing at all.

Buy in "a blob"? Wait for lower prices? Fear and greed will dog your steps.

The safest, smoothest way, in my view, is to build your inventory in tranches (portions). It eliminates trying to "buy at the lows". It's a simple, mechanical method to start your "stack" or keep adding to it. It helps you keep focused on the big, longer-term picture instead of the short-term price squiggles and the sea of opinions from "gurus". Three is a nice number. Buy one-third of your intended amount now. One-third in a month or so. And the final third sometime shortly after that. Or to tweak your program. If prices fall more than you expect, purchase your second one-third at a price point that looks "attractive".

Save pennies and nickels now? Pay dollars later?

If you believe, as we do, that gold and silver are destined to trade much, much higher in the coming years, don't try to nick Mr. Market for some small change. Do like Pat Gorman has always said. First, "Plan your work" then "Work your plan." There are few guarantees in the world, including this one. But when you look at what supports this thesis, it's easy to see that it has a lot going for it. I've made the decision to make physical precious metals a part of what I do for insurance and possible profit for myself and my family. How about you?

RECOMMENDATIONS

GOLD CATEGORY ONE INSURANCE

Resource Consultants feels that the most important part of your portfolio is Gold and Silver Bullion bars and coins. These offer a store of wealth and purchasing power which is based on the value of the metal. If you are new to the physical metals market, you might have the idea that only the very rich can afford Gold or Silver Coins. Nothing could be further from the truth. Gold coins from United States, Canada, Austria, South Africa and several other countries are available in 1oz., ½ oz., 1/4oz. and 1/10oz. sizes. While many pick up rolls of gold coins, these coins are available from Resource Consultants in any quantity that fits your budget. You will be surprised how quickly you can accumulate a nice store of portable real wealth by just putting away a coin or two each payday.

Yes, even gold coins are available in Monster boxes!

GOLD ~ CATEGORY TWO
PRE 1986 OLDER COINS

We have always loved the U.S. minted older coins such as the $20 Saint Gaudens or Liberty in XF condition as well as the $10 and $5 Indian or Liberty. These Beautiful American coins have a small premium over the bullion coins while offering the added value of being a piece of history and beauty that is no longer minted.

Other choices in this category include the 20 Franc, containing .1867 fine gold or British Sovereign which contains .2354 troy oz. of gold

These above mentioned coins come in different designs which make them fun to collect and offer a way to hold older gold coins at close to bullion prices.

Call Resource Consultants at 800-494-4149 for current prices, availability or recommendations!

GOLD ~ CATEGORY THREE
RARITIES AND NUMISMATICS

The only numismatic coins we recommend are Minted by the United States Mint and third party graded by PCGS or NGC. This speculative category can be a very satisfying part of your portfolio once you have taken care of category one and two. Although, many of our clients have done very well with this category and love the pride and privacy that owning the older and more rare coins provide. This category is just now beginning to pick up again but has not moved as much as the bullion "yet". Those of you who love these more valuable or collector coins can take advantage of this market before they too regain the values seen before 2008. Call us for current prices, availabilities or recommendations. We can help you put together beautiful sets!

A word to the wise… We heard an ad on the radio recently a coin dealer is who is asking anyone who owns coins to call him and they will evaluate your coins for free. WHY would anyone, in their right mind tell anyone, especially a stranger what they have in precious metals or tangible assets? We are reminded of a sweet older gentleman who several years ago was CONtacted by what we believe to be that same organization and they told the man they would have someone in his area who would come to his house and evaluate his coins for free! He was not a customer of ours since he had bought all of his coins many years prior but loved our newsletters and sent many referrals our way. The trusting old man let them in and long story short they talked him out of all his bullion Krugerrands told him the Krugerrands were foolish to own and that they would be confiscated and sold him instead, a few high grade numismatic coins . He felt stupid and bullied and as soon as they were gone regretted every talking with them. Once the deal was done, he was not able to get hold of them or get his bullion coins back. He called us and told us what had happened ashamed and broken because these scoundrels talked him out of his safety net and into high grade collector coins at a huge premium that at his age, he might never recover.

Now these same people are doing this with holders of numismatic coins telling people that the graded coins are a horrible investment and offering to "take them off your hands" before they become worthless… Ask yourself this question..
If something is bad to own, why are they working so hard to buy them?? Because they want to stock up their inventory where and while they can grab things from the public at very low prices. And better yet, sell whatever they can make the most on. This is in the investment industry, called churning, is unethical, and certainly does not have the best interest of the client in mind.

When you choose to invest in or liquidate some of your metals, Resource Consultants, can and will offer advice and follow your wishes but no one here will EVER push you or snoop into your business. Our goal is to help you achieve your goals. We are a company built on happy customers and referrals. We work very hard to keep our relationships with our client friends the best in the business!

SILVER CATEGORY ONE INSURANCE

Silver is the most affordable of the precious metals. If Gold is the place to store your wealth for the future like a precious metals savings account, then Silver is where you store your purchasing power for the everyday things and you can look at it as your precious metals checking account. If Gold at some point goes to 10,000.000 per ounce and many believe it can and will, then, that would place the value of silver at about $500 per ounce! What if it only went half that high in value? Still not bad, right? Where do you think the currencies will be in one year? Two years? 10 years? It does not give us a warm and fuzzy feeling. Silver, on the other hand is like Gold, real money. We strongly encourage you to pick up as much of this white metal as you possibly can on a regular basis. I could just be the best investment you will ever make!

Pre 1965 U.S. circulated silver coins or "junk silver" has become more available for the time being largely due a little liquidation by holders who have been waiting for the recent rise in silver prices.

The 90% silver is sold by the face value and a $1000. face value bag will contain approximately 715 oz of actual silver. Resource Consultants makes these coins available in $1000., $500. $250. Or $100 face value bags and the prices fluctuate with the spot prices of silver.

1oz Silver Eagles, Philharmonics, Maple Leafs and the new 2016 .9999 1oz Silver Austrian Kangaroos are the favorite bullion silver choices as are the 1oz Silver Rounds. These items are available in rolls or 20 or 25 ounces and Resource Consultants will pick up the shipping in insurance charge for orders of 300 oz. or more. Monster Boxes of 500 ounces offer the best discounts.

The big 5oz America the Beautiful coins make great gifts for most any occasion and are good choice for those on a small budget. Whether you pick up just one at a time or full 10 coin (50oz) rolls, these massive coffee coaster sized and low mintage U.S. Coins are an impressive sight to behold!

Most anyone can afford silver. This is where you can get your toes in and take advantage of silvers current low prices or even help teach a friend or family member the value of real money by helping them to invest for themselves.
