Dear Friends, September/October 2016

Our U.S. Dollar has been ZOMBIFIED! Global currency wars along with our irresponsible Fed and the escalation of digital cash have all but killed it. Still, the dollar somehow keeps getting back on its wobbly feet and shuffling on carrying the disease of more and more debt with every rotting step.

When the day comes that the U.S. dollar no longer holds the #1 place globally; What does it mean to you and me? I means several things and none of them give that warm and fuzzy feeling. Jim Rickards and the Daily Reckoning are among those of us of the belief that One World, One Bank and One Currency is in the plan and there is little to nothing that we can do to stop it. However, we are not helpless. There are things we can do to immunize ourselves from the invasion of the money snatchers somewhat…. It is possible to not only preserve your wealth, but to actually grow it!

The following is from The Daily Reckoning –Addison Wiggon nearly two years ago. It never rang truer.

You can probably guess what one of his recommendations is already: Go on your own gold standard right now, the rest of the world's governments be damned.

"A fixed exchange rate is not essential to gold's role in a contract money system," he said. "It is necessary only that the citizen be free to buy or sell gold at any time. Any citizen can go on a personal gold standard by buying gold with paper dollars…"

He says our Zero Hour remains a distinct possibility — in which the price of real gold you hold in your hand runs away from the "paper price" quoted on CNBC. He thinks it could even be the trigger for the next crisis.

"As long as [gold] holders remain in paper contracts," he writes, "the system is in equilibrium. If holders in large numbers were to demand physical delivery, they could be snowflakes on an unstable mountain of paper gold. When other holders realize that the physical gold will run out before they can redeem their contracts for bullion, the slide can cascade into an avalanche, a de facto bank run, except the banks in this case are the gold warehouses that support the exchanges and ETFs."

Even Warren Buffett — that tireless critic of gold and its inability to throw off cash flow — has bought something very similar to gold, says Rickards. "Buffett has been known to disparage gold, but he is the king of hard asset investing, and when it comes to the mega rich, it is better to focus on their actions than their words." ~ End ~

Gold, Silver and Palladium: ~ by David H Smith ~
"Pay me now, or pay me (much more) later."

In November, the vicious bear markets in gold, silver and the mining stocks were drawing to a close. The last of the discouraged bulls, many having held on since the May and September 2011 tops in silver and gold respectively, were throwing in the towel. The December, 2015 capitulation marked the almost-certain end of the bear market in gold, silver and the miners - not to mention commodities in general, that got underway when silver prices topped near $50 in May, 2011, and gold printed $1,920 later that year.

Gold fell 44% and silver 70%, shaking out all but the strongest hands. The best mining stocks dropped 70-80%, and many exploration companies cratered 90 - 95%.

In December, the metals formed what chartists call a "rounded bottom", visible on the attached chart. Unnoticed by many, silver had actually struck a $14 bottom a year earlier, bounced up above $18 and then gone back down to re-test that 2015 low. As you can see, silver (and gold) then proceeded to make a very strong multi-month run to the upside, so far peaking at $21.25. At this writing, during what looks like the first significant (and necessary) correction, silver has traded as low as $18.80 the ounce.

While the physical precious metals (including palladium and platinum) were making a very strong run, the mining stock sector staged a massive rally. The key date of the panic bottom for most of these stocks was January 19. One of a number of the miners this writer was following (and whose properties the author has personally visited), was Impact Silver - a low-profile silver miner operating at the Royal Mines of Zacualpan Silver District in Mexico.
Months earlier, stock buys were made at $0.35 and $0.27. Imagine the feeling that day when the price declined to $0.22 cents! Consider that less than 5 years before, this company's share price hit a high of...$3.20!

This turned out to be a capitulation event, with prices closing on heavy volume that very day, back up into the 30 cent range. Not long after, a rocket launch got underway, virtually doubling the stock price. As we get into the longer term sessions of the gold and silver secular bull run over the next few years, expect this kind of violent action, both up and down, for the physical metals as well.

What took place over the last 8 months for this stock and scores of others was a series of stair-step rallies which caught almost all of the "experts" by surprise by its intensity, duration and size. No less than 6 "corrections" lasting from a few days to a couple of weeks took place. Just about every newsletter writer either recommended that readers get out at the first sign of weakness, or tried to jump in and out with every chart squiggle. One writer actually told his readers he watched the entire run from the sidelines, to see if it was legitimate. For this advice he charges $3,000 a year.

One of the largest 1st leg bull market runs in history has just taken place

In research for his market letter, Gann Global Financial, Jim Flanagan spends a great deal of time comparing the size and duration of hundreds of bull and bear legs across many stock and commodity sectors. He found the speed and size of the initial 2016, to be far from ordinary, to say the least. The conclusion he reached was that, "The 175% Advance in Gold Stocks in 5 Months, 22 Days Now Places Us As the 11th Greatest 1st Leg Up in Any Bull Market in Any of the Tangible Assets During the Past 150 Years. In Other Words, it is the Elite of the Elite."

Many new investors have come to appreciate the precious metals story and are now holders of physical gold, silver and palladium, in addition to the more volatile and speculative mining stocks. But for those who have not, or who have deferred adding to their positions in recent years as prices kept making new lows, the time is nigh when they might want to give serious consideration to changing that behavior pattern.

Mining stocks are now in a multiple week "intermediate term correction." When Fibonacci numbers are applied to the decline, the possible percentage retracement levels to look for would be 38, 50 and 67%.The current environment may offer the best, and perhaps last significant opportunity since the 2015 lows were printed.

Shoulda, Coulda, Woulda…

You could have (should have) bought some - or more - physical gold, silver and perhaps palladium in late 2015 or early 2016. Perhaps you did not. If you conclude that you were "wrong" in not doing so, then you can do one of two things. Either "stop being wrong" and accumulate precious metals, or just keep watching and wondering.

The feeling that people have when they fail to take action because they have "missed the bottom" is well described by David Morgan at themorganreport.com He calls it "The Amateur's Perspective." He says,

"The problem with a lot of people is that they have an amateur's perspective - which means that they think that if they didn't get in at the low, they've missed the move. Actually the best traders and the wealthiest people on the planet just take out the middle. In other words they may not even get in the market again until it's past $26 (at the time DM made this statement, silver was trading at below $21.) and ride it from 26 to 46, get out and take massive amounts of money from the market as silver goes up to a hundred. They know what they're doing; they're not trading in hindsight."

This kind of "perspective" - if allowed to dominate a person's thinking and actions - is a sure recipe for either watching the rest of the precious metals' bull run from the sidelines, OR waiting until late in the game and THEN jumping in at much higher prices---most likely, right near the top.

"Buying low is never easy..."

Adam Hamilton, in his excellent Zeal Speculation and Investment letter - subscriber-based, but which also has quite a bit of commentary in the public domain on locations like 321gold.com on September 9 that:

Buying low is never easy. When selloffs snowball to major levels, there's always a chance they will cascade even lower. So it's very challenging psychologically to fight the thundering herd and buy when everyone else is selling. It feels terrible buying into capitulation selloffs, almost nauseating. The only way to build the fortitude necessary to do it is to stay exceptionally informed, which helps frame selloffs in context.

Brent Cook, a highly respected geologist and analyst speaks about the mindset of his newsletter subscribers, by way of an interesting analogy, saying:

I don't think we're going to see a capitulation moment; I think it will be more gradual. I see it in my newsletter subscribers. Most of them have been around for a long time, but in the last few months, people who have been with me from the beginning have started falling by the wayside even though we had a 16% gain last year and we are not doing too awfully bad so far this year. They all say they will be back as soon as the market turns. This is what it starts to look like on the bottom.

I envision it as a band of pioneers walking across the salt flats in July, one by one dropping to the side. One day, we'll turn around, look back and notice the hills are starting to get greener. That's how we'll know capitulation happened, by looking behind us at the wasteland and desolation we crossed.

Insurance vs. Profit

This fall, David Morgan and this writer are working on a book on metals and mining, titled Second Chance: How to Make and Keep Big Money from the Coming Gold and Silver Shock-Wave. In one of the introductory chapters, which supports the idea of holding precious metals as insurance first, profit second, we write:

The Japanese have a saying, "It's an ill wind that blows no good." When the financial tsunami shock-wave that's headed toward us engulfs the global economy, it will precipitate the greatest wealth-transfer in the history of humankind. Assets will move from one group - the unprepared, to another set of people - those who paid attention to the storm that was forming, and took appropriate action....

The same financial wave that will be so destructive to most asset classes, also contains within it a parallel wave. This ground swell, based upon simple supply-demand metrics, will drive gold, silver and the mining stocks to levels many times higher than was the case in 2016. As an antidote to the collapse of an old financial order and the rise of a new one, this subset of the resource sector offers those who understand how to work with it, "sky high profit potential...

By acquiring some "hold in your hand" precious metals, you will have established a financial underpinning that can help protect at least a portion of your overall monetary holdings. Gold and silver prices tend to move in a contrary manner to most other asset classes. When confidence falls, the economy struggles, inflation (or deflation) gets out of control, people tend to change their financial perspective. They move from what the trade calls "risk-on" assets like real estate, bonds, Treasury bills and the broader stock market, to a "risk-off" posture, wherein physical gold and silver are eagerly sought.

While you're at it, don't just think of precious metals as a "fear trade". They're also, as Frank Holmes has aptly framed it, also a "love trade"- the cultural affinity for precious metals in China, India, SE Asia and the Middle East. Millions of Chindians (people from China and India) are buying gold and silver for dowries, in jewelry, and for "in the ground" savings accounts. Demand from these sources will push precious metals higher over the coming years, regardless of the level of stress in the financial system.

Hypocrisy: The world's central banks trash-talk metals, and buy mining stocks.

It turns out that Deutsche Bank, Germany's (and the EUs) largest, is holding well over a billion dollars in mining stocks, in an apparent effort to offset its otherwise shaky finances. Sovereign wealth funds in Switzerland and Norway have also invested billions.

Mac Slavo comments on what may turn out to be a trend, remarking,

It’s been suspected for quite some time that central banks are actively taking positions in collapse-related assets like gold and silver. We now have confirmation that at least two of them have done it. There are likely more. There can be only one explanation. Our monetary masters know without a shadow of a doubt that their policies will fail and they have lost confidence in their ability to stabilize the system. Consequently, they, like billionaire investors and major financial institutions around the world, are rapidly shifting their worthless paper money into the world's historical assets of last resort: gold and silver.

A short review of recent U.S. monetary history

The Old dollar represented accumulated wealth, backed with gold. Additional dollars were created only insofar as there was sufficient gold to back them. (Slightly oversimplified, because Congress had set expanded parameters by which the money supply could be raised, so that a rough link, rather than an exact 1:1 value ratio to the amount of gold in storage was maintained).

At Bretton Woods, New Hampshire in 1944, the 44 attending nations agreed to accept the dollar as the world's reserve currency - only because of the promise that it would always be exchangeable by member nations for gold. This "worked" for awhile, but as the U.S. became more profligate about printing money, foreign nations started demanding gold for their excess dollars, taking U.S. reserves down from 20,000 to 8,000 tons of gold.

After Nixon went off the gold standard ("closing the gold window") in 1971 - no longer allowing convertibility by foreign nations, we had the New dollar, which was based upon debt. Printed out of thin air, with nothing to back it, the fiat currency became nothing more than credit. This made it possible for businesses large and small, for individuals - and for the government itself, to go deeply into debt. All that was necessary was to print more dollars, buy foreign goods, and let those dollars slosh around on overseas shores as "lubricants" for the global economy. This excess was in part what led up to the almost-fatal global financial shock-wave in 2008.

Unfortunately, the systemic issues causing the 2008 melt-down have not been addressed. Indeed, they have only become more severe. As a massive holder of US debt, China' whose GNP has now surpassed that of the U.S., became increasingly concerned. So it, along with other nations demanded that a new type of accounting be undertaken to aid in "stability."

The new approach (which has existed in limited form for a number of years) will be accomplished by greatly expanding the use of Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) by the International Monetary Fund (IMF). SDRs are in effect a new reserve currency, calculated and posted daily in USD. They consist of the four primary global currencies - the (U.S.) dollar, (EU) euro, (British) pound and (Japanese) yen. Last year the executive committee of the IMF voted to admit the Chinese yuan into the basket of currencies into which an SDR is convertible. Soon - officially on September 30 - inclusion of the yuan will thus make it five. A weighted commodity component, most likely gold, will also be included.

In July, the IMF called for creation of a private SDR bond market, utilizing market SDRs (M-SDRs), as opposed to official SDRs (O-SDRs). This will enable private bond issues - and help slow the drain on money seeking to flee China, where it ends up in the West, being placed into gold and foreign real estate.

The effect of having the SDR as a default reserve currency, as opposed to the US dollar in that historic role, will be to cause a surfeit of dollars to flow back into the U.S., with profound implications for Americans. Their purchase power could decline by as much as 50% during coming years, at the same time that inflation is surging. The dollar may still be regarded as primus inter pares - "first among equals", but it will no longer be the global reserve currency.

Jim Rickards has some very specific thoughts about this, which you would do well to seriously consider. Recently he said,

If some scenarios play out, you are going to see the price of gold go up… a lot. And it may go up a lot in a very short period of time. It's not going to go up 10% per year for seven years and the price doubles... It will have a kind of a slow grind upward - and then a spike - and then another spike - and then a super-spike. The whole thing could happen in a matter of 90 days -- six months at the most.

When that happens, you're going to have two Americas. You're going to have an America that was not prepared. Paper savings will be wiped out; 401(k)s will be devalued; pensions, insurance and annuities will be devalued through inflation… Because remember, it's not just the price of gold going up.

It's like putting a thermometer in a patient, getting a 104-degree temperature and blaming the thermometer. The thermometer's not to blame; it's just telling you what's going on. Likewise, the price of gold is not an economic object or aim in itself; it's a price signal. It tells you what's going on in the economy.

….I suggest you buy your gold at current levels -- around $1,220 -- and ride the wave up to these much higher levels ($4,000-5,000 an ounce) and then assess the situation. Be nimble.

Gold revaluation may be "written in the rocks" 800-494-4149

In one of this writer's recent letters, accessible in the buysilvernow.com Archives, we discussed the concept of a "gold revaluation", wherein much of the world's paper financial instruments would be backed by gold in an effort to maintain confidence in the global financial system. This is not the same thing as a gold standard, where people would trade gold as currency. But should revaluation occur, it would have a profound effect on all of us. For those who hold gold, the price would rise by several thousand dollars an ounce, perhaps overnight. For everyone else, the change would be even more profound. Hugo Salinas Price who believes this event is highly likely, says:

For the US, the revaluation of gold means an end to its ability to obtain any goods it desires, in any quantity, in any place, at any price by simply tendering today's mighty fiat Dollar in mock-payment, in exchange for those goods. The US economy will have to suffer a huge and also painful, wrenching adjustment to its new situation in a different world, where balanced trade and balanced budgets are relentlessly imposed by the new status of gold as international money. On the positive side, US manufacturing will immediately spring to life to supply the US market; employment and incomes will surge with the rebirth of US manufactures.

Once all currencies are "gold-backed" by revalued gold reserves, then gold is once again the international money, and the Dollar becomes nothing more than the national currency of the US, as quantities of gold become the international means of settling trade. We need not worry ourselves about how this will take place, because that it will happen is a certainty. All prices of goods and services around the world will really be gold prices, since all currencies will be redeemable at sight, in gold. Such is the significance of the coming revaluation of gold.

The "war on cash" will precede the "war on gold".

You may have heard or read about Federal Reserve talk about taking larger currency bills out of circulation - in the U.S. specifically the $100, and perhaps even the $50 bill, supposedly in order to "fight the drug traffic." In addition to driving interest rates down into negative territory, this results in a figurative war on cash. The government wants to be able to track how and where you use your own money. The next "war" will be on gold, forcing supplies to dwindle and prices to rise. Doug Casey has long watched this evolution, and issues these cautionary statements:

I expect, as the subtle war on both cash and the transfer of capital across borders gains momentum, that gold coins are going to become the next focus of attention.
So I suggest you act now to beat the last minute rush. Have a meaningful percentage of your net worth in gold coins.

There's a profoundly large financial shock-wave headed our way. As you does your own research keep in mind Jim Rickard's admonition. He says,

“The time to act is now… A new crisis is a mathematical certainty, but I can take it further . . . what you don’t hear is this will be exponentially larger than any financial panic in the past… The next time, the Fed is going to be in trouble. They are already insolvent on a mark-to-market basis. Each bailout gets much bigger than the one before. The Fed has a 10-foot seawall, and they are going to get hit with a 50-foot tsunami.”

Luke Burgess of Wealth Daily:

The Federal Reserve is getting pulled deeper into the currency wars waging among Asian countries. It can't allow the U.S. dollar to appreciate very much from here. And several key members have stated on numerous occasions over the past several months that inflation is below their target rate. So I don't think there's anything stopping the Fed from keeping its monetary policies loose for the time being.

With that in mind, I'm strongly urging investors to own physical gold bullion as well as equities right now. Major gold producers like Barrick Gold (NYSE: ABX) and GoldCorp (NYSE: GG) look to be in great positions. I like the upside to the slightly smaller companies, like Newmont Mining (NYSE: NEM) and Yamana Gold (NYSE: AUY), right at the moment.

I expect to see gold prices immediately jump next Wednesday following the announcement to hold the overnight rate. And after that, I see gold continuing higher. So I strongly urge you to buy gold and gold stocks now. Luke Burgess ~ Wealth Daily ~

The Following is an excerpt from Crawford Perspectives : Aug 29/2019

The GOLD (chart at right) made its high for the year so far in early July at $1377.50. It has now traced out a sequence of higher lows and lower highs. In other words, drifting sideways in a narrowing range. On Friday it managed a large gain, then fell back losing it all, perhaps tinged by Jante Yellen‟s speech. She is once more promoting the idea of one or two more rate rises this year. That makes some GOLD holders nervous. We doubt that rate rises will occur as difficult astro patterns suggest more economic problems worldwide. We would not want to hold speculative positions on a break below 1290. A close above $1350 could generate another leg up to our original target of $1440. Hold Long-term positions for much higher prices. Keep some for life! Last month we wrote that "Some sceptics mention that the Dollar could lose its Reserve Status at some point, and some nations are becoming nervous about holding large quantities." There are some prognosticators who are very nervous as we approach the U.S. fiscal year-end September 30. We are not privy to the inner councils of the IMF but they have threatened for several years to lessen the importance of the U.S. currency in their Drawing Rights which do serve as a rudimentary form of world currency. Some very dynamic aspects to the New Moon could bring revolution to U.S. streets

RECOMMENDATIONS
GOLD CATEGORY ONE
INSURANCE

Resource Consultants feels that the most important part of your portfolio is Gold and Silver Bullion bars and coins. These offer a store of wealth and purchasing power which is based on the value of the metal. If you are new to the physical metals market, you might have the idea that only the very rich can afford Gold or Silver Coins. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Gold coins from United States, Canada, Austria, South Africa and several other countries are available in 1oz., ½ oz., 1/4oz. and 1/10oz. sizes.

While many pick up rolls of gold coins, these coins are available from Resource Consultants in any quantity that fits your budget. With Gold spot price at about $1315.00 you should be able to purchase an actual Physical one ounce of Gold piece for approximately $1355.00 for a bar or Krugerrand to 1386.00 for a full one ounce U.S. Gold Eagle or Buffalo coin. The prices and premiums can and do fluctuate until the trade is locked in with the market when you place your order. Quantity discounts could also apply.

You will be surprised how quickly you can accumulate a nice store of portable real wealth by just putting away a coin or two each payday. The physical metals prices of Bullion coins will move as the spot prices fluctuate and premiums may also fluctuate with supply and demand.

South Africa first minted the one ounce Gold Krugerrand in 1967. It was struck in 22 karat gold and contained exactly 1oz of pure gold. It weighs slightly over an ounce because it is mixed with a small amount of copper for hardness.

GOLD ~ CATEGORY TWO
PRE 1986 OLDER COINS

We have always loved the U.S. minted older coins such as the $20 Saint Gaudens or Liberty in XF condition as well as the $10 and $5 Indian or Liberty. These Beautiful American coins have a small premium over the bullion coins while offering the added value of being a piece of history and beauty that is no longer minted.

Other choices in this category include the 20 Franc, containing .1867 fine gold or British Sovereign which contains .2354 troy oz. of fine gold.

These above mentioned coins come in different designs which make them fun to collect and offer a way to hold older gold coins at close to bullion prices.

Call Resource Consultants at 800-494-4149 for current prices, availability or recommendations!

GOLD ~ CATEGORY THREE
RARITIES AND NUMISMATICS

The only numismatic coins we recommend are Minted by the United States Mint and third party graded by PCGS or NGC. This speculative category can be a very satisfying part of your portfolio once you have taken care of category one and two. Although, many of our clients have done very well with this category and love the pride and privacy that owning the older and more rare coins provide. This category is just now beginning to pick up again but has not moved as much as the bullion "yet". Those of you who love these more valuable or collector coins can take advantage of this market before they too regain the values seen before 2008. Call us for current prices, availabilities or recommendations. We can help you put together beautiful sets!

You can put physical Precious Metals in your IRA! Resource Consultants can show you how easily you can own Gold, Silver, Platinum or Palladium in your Precious metals.

A word to the wise… We recently heard that a company had gotten someone into the wrong items for their Precious Metals IRA. Be very careful, especially if you have the kind of account that allows you to take possession of your IRA account metals. There are strict rules re: which metals and coins are IRA acceptable. Collector coins of any kind as well 90% silver coins or as the South African Krugerrand are not IRA acceptable Call Resource Consultants, Inc. 800-494-4149 and we will help you put together the right IRA package to fit your needs.

When you choose to invest in or liquidate some of your metals, Resource Consultants, can and will offer advice and follow your wishes but no one here will EVER push you or snoop into your business. Our goal is to help you achieve your goals. We are a company built on happy customers and referrals. We work very hard to keep our relationships with our client friends the best in the business!

SILVER CATEGORY ONE
INSURANCE

Silver is the most affordable of the precious metals. If Gold is the place to store your wealth for the future like a precious metals savings account, then Silver is where you store your purchasing power for the everyday things and you can look at it as your precious metals checking account. If Gold at some point goes to 10,000.000 per ounce and many believe it can and will, then, that would place the value of silver at about $500 per ounce! What if it only went half that high in value? Still not bad, right? Where do you think the currencies will be in one year? Two years? 10 years? It does not give us a warm and fuzzy feeling. Silver, on the other hand is like Gold, real money. We strongly encourage you to pick up as much It could just be the best investment you of this white metal as you possibly can on a regular basis. It could just be one the best investments you will ever make!

Pre 1965 U.S. circulated 90% silver coins or "junk silver" have become more available for the time being largely due a little liquidation by holders who have been waiting for the recent rise in silver prices. The 90% silver is sold by the face value and a $1000. face value bag will contain approximately 715 oz of actual silver. Resource Consultants makes these coins available in $1000. $500. $250. or $100 face value bags. The prices fluctuate with the spot prices of silver.

1oz Silver Eagles, Philharmonics, Maple Leafs and the new 2016 .9999 1oz Silver Austrian Kangaroos are the favorite bullion silver choices as are the 1oz Silver Rounds. These items are available in rolls or 20 or 25 ounces and Resource Consultants will pick up the shipping in insurance charge for orders of 300 oz. or more. Monster Boxes of 500 ounces offer the best discounts.

Other metals to consider adding to your precious metals portfolio or IRA are Platinum or Palladium bars or coins. We will be happy to assist you in putting together a great collection over time.

Don't wait to start or add to your portfolio only to realize the dollar has died and you no longer are able to protect your purchasing power, or you have lost the opportunity to get in at the current low prices. It does not and should not be an all or nothing decision. An abundant life is all about balance. Just get started and stay steady in your acquisitions. When the time comes to liquidate, we can also help you with that. 800-494-4149.
